

Out of My Mind

I'll Survive the Global Warning

By Anil Shrivastava 'Musafir'

Whether you believe climate change is imminent or you're a skeptic who thinks it's a hoax, you'll have to tolerate this till the 2020 election is over. It's July and temperature is hitting 90 degrees Fahrenheit. If this continues this way, we'll witness cremated leaves instead of fall colors. So, what have you done lately to save our planet?

Did you just ask what have I done about it? I lost all my hair so that I don't spend all my time shampooing and rinsing them. It's one of the many selfless acts that I perform every day to make our world a better place. I don't have use for plastic combs, or hair dryers either so that I can save on electricity. I think we all ought to go bald. Walking around with a full head of hair is like driving an SUV. It's irresponsible. Hey, you hair people, shame on you!

Men, do you need motivation to do that? How 'bout impressing women? When you meet a woman, start talking about global warming and then show her your resolve by pointing to your bald head. It's a real icebreaker.

The politicians motivated by Al Gore, who won a Nobel, an Oscar and an Emmy by showing slide shows on global warming, are warning that global warming outlook is much worse than what Al Gore originally projected. Well. Al Gore predicted that global warming will destroy our planet. What could be worse than that? It's a real challenge for our politicians to come up with worse cataclysm.

A Congressman from Alaska answered that his people lived in igloos. Once the igloos melt, they'd lose their privacy.

The Congressman from Iowa warned that if the global warming was not checked, the corn crops would turn into popcorn. That may starve the Iowans who live on corn and drive on ethanol.

A Congressman from Georgia lamented that the poultry farmers in his state were already losing their livelihoods as the chickens were laying hard boiled eggs.

Joe Biden took the reporters in his chamber and asked them to feel the heat. Unfortunately, as the fuddled VP was making his point, Kamala Harris pointed to him that the thermostat in his chamber was set too high.

President Trump tweeted that all Sleepy Joe had to do was switch to the Celsius system while he was still in power. That could have dramatically lower the temperature from 90 degrees to 32.

I personally support saving the earth from disastrous global warming though, personally speaking, it's not going to be an inconvenient truth for me. I grew up in India. I didn't have a car. I used to either walk or ride a bike everywhere. We hardly used to get an uninterrupted supply of electricity. Our home was lighted by sunlight during the day and lantern during the night. We cooked over fire. So, I'll survive global warming. Not sure about you!

"I'll get up, 8 AM
Every day just like any other day
Won't erase who I am
You'll be surprised" -B C Jean